All About the Fish Sauce

Bringing traditional Vietnamese cuisine to the streets of Eugene BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

Tam Howitt and her husband Heath Howitt say that to understand Vietnamese cuisine, you have to understand fish sauce. The pair recently opened Tam's Place Vietnamese Cuisine, a food truck located on 29th and Friendly in Eugene.

Fish sauce is made with fermented fish extract and sea salt. Different people use different ingredients to taste — for example, peppers to add a little heat. The Howitts add lime, giving their sauce a tangy bite.

On the appetizer menu, Tam's Place offers deep-fried fish-sauce chicken wings or tamarind chicken wings, dipped in the sweet-sour sauce made from the fruit of the tamarind tree (also known as the "Indian date"). To get the full experience of seafood-heavy Vietnamese cuisine, order the fish-sauce wings.

Tam Howitt is inspired by tradition in Vietnamese food. She says her upbringing in Vietnam was full of simple food prepared at home: stir fries and rice. When she moved to Shanghai, with its multinational dining scene, her eyes were opened to the cuisine of her region. Relocating to America, she missed Vietnamese food and was disappointed in American cuisine: "Too much fat, not enough veggies," she says.

Tam Howitt taught herself how to make the traditional cuisine of her home and a passion for cooking was born. While she is inspired by fundamental Vietnamese food, she adds her own twist. Unlike how chicken wings are prepared in Vietnam, Tam Howitt's deliciously sweet-sour fish-sauce chicken wings — with just the right amount of heat — are cooked in tapioca, giving them a sweet crispiness.

Heath Howitt says alongside fish sauce, when eating traditional Vietnamese food expect rice and lots of fresh vegetables. Also on the starter menu is a papaya green salad: shredded papaya, shrimp and carrot served on a house-made cracker — a wonderful interplay of refreshing, fresh vegetables and sweet fruit with a light, crispy rice cracker.

The Howitts say their signature dish is the Broken Rice Plate: grilled pork chop, chicken or tofu, pickled veggies, shrimp, cucumber, rice and Viet meat loaf. All meat at Tam's is sourced from the Eugene-based Long's Meat Market. Most options on the menu are gluten-free.

Heath Howitt says it's important with Vietnamese food to blend everything into one bite, unlike in the West where our dishes tend toward strict segregation of flavors; load your chopsticks with sauce, pork chop, shrimp, rice and the assortment of veggies to experience the subtle, fresh flavors, appropriate levels of heat and aromatic, sweet, sour and spicy fish sauce.

Perhaps the most intriguing dish at Tam's is the traditional Vietnamese honeycomb cake for dessert. The lime green cake is made with tapioca, coconut and pandan extract, giving the cake its unique hue. Pandan is a tropical plant; its leaves are widely used as a flavoring in Southeast Asian cooking and frequently compared to vanilla.

Tam's Place Vietnamese Cuisine is open 11:30 am to 2:30 pm and 5 pm to 8 pm Tuesday through Saturday on the corner of 29th and Friendly, except when it's on location for special events. Check its Facebook page for updates and a full menu.

Gone Toxic

Toxic Wings and Fries offers healthier fast food options

BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

THE INTEXICATOR

Like it or not, football season is upon us like a fullback in tight pants. For many, football means parties and parties mean food. If you need a fresh catering option for your next tailgate (or couch-gate), consider the meanest-named new restaurant in Eugene: Toxic Wings and Fries on River Road.

“Peppers are classified as toxic,” says owner and founder Brandon Ingram. “We’re the only animal that eats them.” Ingram’s son thought of the name and Ingram says when he heard it, the business logo immediately came to mind. “I saw that skull, I saw that ‘X.’”

“X is the most masculine, marketable letter in the English language,” Ingram says, admitting he knew a restaurant named Toxic would be controversial. “That’s what got us so busy before we even opened,” he says with a smile.

Toxic’s menu is simple: wings, fries and burgers. Ingram says his wings are hand-rubbed. “We have our own rub,” Ingram explains, “and then I smoke them in mesquite and hickory. I do that for about an hour.”

Ingram says his process renders off excess fat and cooks the wings about 80 percent, finishing them off in the fryer. “We fry them in rice-bran oil,” Ingram adds, continuing, “It’s got no taste at all, so you actually taste the product.” Ingram says rice-bran oil fights cholesterol and has antioxidants, making Toxic’s “fast-like food” menu as healthy as possible.

Ingram also prepares boneless chicken wings. “They’re really popular,” Ingram says. He takes fresh chicken breast, hand-cuts it and, instead of using batter, adds flour to his rub. “No gristle, no fat, just nice white meat,” he says.

To go with the wings, Toxic offers a broad menu of unique, rich and flavorful sauces: tangy Carolina, apricot chipotle and the delicious chili maple lime — delicious because, well, chili, maple and lime — on a chicken wing.

Toxic’s 16 sauces range in heat from mild (teriyaki) to “toxic sauce.” There are even a few off-menu sauce options for the extra-adventurous eater called “A Ghost” and “Toxic Lava.”

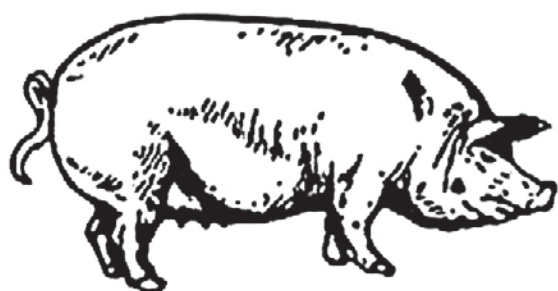

“We serve the sauces on the side,” instead of tossed with the wings, “because we want you to taste the rub.” Ingram says his wings start with a good foundation and the sauce is an accent.

But Toxic is more than a wings joint. Ingram says he actually sells more burgers than chicken wings — which seems appropriate, given Toxic’s ’50s diner with a rock ‘n’ roll attitude décor.

Ingram says his buns are baked daily at Reality Kitchen and his beef is sourced from a Junction City farm. And despite the meat-heavy menu, Ingram stresses that Toxic is the only place in Eugene to get the vegetarian “hemp burger” and that he also offers salads.

Ingram also takes pride in the fact his fries and wings are each cooked in their own fryer, meaning Toxic’s fries are truly vegan and the bone-in wings are gluten free. Ingram’s business has been brisk and is only increasing. He takes special orders for large parties, but asks for at least 24-hour notice. A Toxic Wings and Fries website is coming soon.

Toxic Wings and Fries is open 11:30 am to 8 pm Monday through Saturday at 943 River Rd.

Smoke That Salmon

Turn your fresh catch into a tasty treat BY AMY SCHNEIDER

It's hard calling to mind the mouth-watering taste of smoked salmon when staring at a scaly, pungent, eyeballs-and-everything fish. But don't be intimidated — with the help of a smoker, some brine and a little insider information, you can transform your fishy friend into a Northwest delicacy.

Home salmon smoker Mike McHorse says the first step is to filet the fish, which basically means cleaning the fish and using a knife to cut strips of meat from the body, excluding the head. Make sure to remove all bones at this point and keep the skin on. McHorse filets fish in small pieces to make the brining and smoking process easier.

FISH BEING FILETED

Next comes the brine: McHorse didn't share his family recipe, which he says he "got from an old guy who gave it to me in a moment of drunken stupidity," but Wild Duck Café owner Jason Boyer says he uses a brine of equal parts freshly ground black pepper, dark brown sugar and kosher salt. Boyer says for a little extra spice, add curry or cayenne pepper flakes.

Rub the brine all over the salmon filets and stick them in the refrigerator overnight or, at most, 24 hours. Boyer recommends washing the remaining brine off the filets with cold water after they've been cured. Finally, it's time to smoke that salmon.

Boyer uses an industrial heat-assist smoker with a timed electric heat element, but most home smokers like McHorse use a standard Weber kettle grill. For fancier gear, check out stovetop smokers or the Bradley digital smoker, which helps control inside temperatures, an important element of smoking. McHorse has a remote thermometer that tells him the temperature inside the grill, allowing him to monitor and adjust accordingly.

McHorse says he uses chunks of alder wood to cultivate a smoky taste. The temperature needs to stay around 145 to 160 degrees Fahrenheit to keep the moisture in the salmon, and the process can take two to four hours, depending on the size of the filets. The end result should be tender and moist, a delicious, candy-like morsel.

McHorse says he generally eats his smoked salmon as is, since it gets eaten up quickly, but Boyer suggests taking it a step further with the following recipe, a favorite of his. Either way, you're in for a treat!

SMOKED SALMON MOUSSE

½ cup butter
3 tbsp finely chopped shallots
1 tbsp finely chopped fresh dill
3 lbs smoked salmon
1 cup sour cream

Sauté shallots in butter, let cool and add dill. Blend sour cream and butter mixture in a food processor, then add smoked salmon. Blend until smooth, with the consistency of hummus. Place in serving dish and refrigerate. Serve cold with sweet potato chips or rye crackers.

The revamped Oregon Electric Station is an Italian family place

BY VANESSA SALVIA

The Oregon Electric Station, one of Eugene's bastions of fine dining since 1977, reopened Aug. 9 under new ownership, and people have taken notice. "We expected to be busy," General Manager Paolo Ruffi says, "but we have been beyond busy. We've been overwhelmed by the reaction of the people."

Ruffi is an ebullient Sardinian man who was beckoned out of retirement by brother and sister Raffaele and Rossella Ruggeri, the new owners. The Ruggeri's paterfamilias, Roberto, founded an international restaurant group, Bice, with 39 fine-dining restaurants around the world.

Ruffi was the director of operations for Bice New York before retiring to Portland several years ago. "This place is different though," Ruffi says. "It's a family operation, nothing to do with the company. It's much more personal."

La Ruggeri Familia, including children, grandchildren and Rossella and Raffaele Ruggeri's two sisters, moved here about seven years ago. When the previous owner of OES decided to leave the business, the Ruggeris were interested and pressed Ruffi back into service.

Walking around the restaurant with Ruffi, it becomes obvious that hospitality is an area in which the Ruggeris excel. Ruffi says, "We call our guests 'guests,' not 'customers.' This is the hospitality business after all."

At a large table in the main dining room, Rossella and Raffaele Ruggeri are presiding over a meeting. Raffaele Ruggeri's accent is heavy, but the word "hospitality" is plainly spoken while he opens his arms and gestures broadly.

‘When you get older, you realize who you are and what you really want in life. Which is peace and beauty.’

Guests have flocked to Oregon Electric Station. Despite having a full house of 320 people and a wait for tables on a Monday night, the reactions have been positive. Nearly all furnishings inside the historic building are new. However, the changes that were made embrace the history and warmth of the building, which was built in 1914 as a station for the Oregon Electric Railway.

“We knew we wanted to keep the integrity of this building, the heart of this building,” Ruffi says. “It’s a warm building, besides being historic. It’s a milestone in Eugene history. That’s why we kept the name and the building intact.”

New carpeting, new tables and chairs, and new stone floors and bar tops complement the building, not the other way around, Ruffi explains. The space, from the iconic fireplace in the courtyard out front, to the entrance bar, to the private rooms and train cars, have been lightened and brightened.

“We want people to see our food, to see our place, how beautiful this place is,” Ruffi says. Private rooms along with the revamped train cars offer different “vibes,” he adds, from the modern, bustling bar to the Santiam Express train car, which Ruffi says is astonishing in its similarity to the Orient Express train car in which he traveled from Istanbul to Paris. “This looks just like it,” he says.

Yes, the Ruggeris are Italian, and so is the executive chef, a man named Michele Godina, who was executive chef at Ivar’s Salmon House in Seattle for 10 years. But that doesn’t matter, Ruffi says. “It’s a mixed menu. It’s not an Italian restaurant; it’s a restaurant for everybody. Michele knows the food of the Northwest. He knows the market.”

Guests can whet their appetite with burrata OES — fresh, creamy mozzarella cheese, grilled zucchini and mushrooms — or coconut prawns in sweet chili sauce. Lobster, beef, salmon or beet carpaccio is served with black topiko (fish roe), truffles, microgreens or goat cheese.

Entrees range from wild salmon to ossobuco (braised veal shank) and filet mignon to a double bone pork chop. All breads, pastries and pastas, including gnocchi, pappardelle and tortelloni, are made in-house.

The kitchen staff buys almost nothing other than meats and vegetables, Ruffi explains, because they make everything from scratch.

So, why did the Ruggeris and Ruffi, with their globe-spanning interests, choose to live in Eugene and invest so much money and effort into the Oregon Electric Station? “Because when you get older,” Ruffi says, “you realize who you are and what you really want in life. Which is peace and beauty.”

The Oregon Electric Station is open 11:30 am to 10:30 pm Monday through Saturday and 5 pm to 10 pm Sunday at 27 E. 5th Ave. See oestrestaurant.com for more info.

Best of Both Worlds

Whapping Costa Rican food cart serves up a fusion of Caribbean and Hispanic cuisine BY RICK LEVIN

For folks who relish both the stewy, fruity tang of the tropics and the spicy stuff that's served with rice and beans south of the Rio Grande, the cuisine of Costa Rica presents a savory medium. A Central American country bordered by Nicaragua to the north and Panama to the south, Costa Rica touches the Pacific Ocean on one side and the Caribbean on the other, and is therefore uniquely positioned to receive two different but complimentary cultural and culinary influences.

It's the best of both worlds, says Fred Badillaobando, owner and proprietor of Whapping, the new Costa Rican food cart parked beside Tiny Tavern in the Whiteaker. "It's a fusion between Hispanic and Afro-Caribbean," Badillaobando says of the plates he serves, which he describes as staples you can find at any restaurant in his homeland of Costa Rica. "It's the most typical Creole, Costa Rican food, made for everybody from farmers to surfers."

Typical, but largely unfamiliar to Northwest palates. At Whapping — patois for the greeting "what's happening?"

— the traditional plates, known as casados, are served with sides of rice, beans and a delicious fresh slaw, as well as fried plantains, a member of the banana family that runs larger than your average platano (Spanish for nanner). The main dishes are caribena chicken or a stewed steak which, in consistency and tenderness, lies somewhere between a roast and a jerk, and is mouthwateringly tasty.

Badillaobando says he learned to cook from his mother. "My mom is a culinary art teacher," he explains, noting that when he was a young man in Costa Rica, he and a good friend spent their vacations at culinary school learning the ropes of local cooking. Badillaobando moved to Oregon in 2002 to study multimedia design at the UO; he still runs a multilingual graphic design business as well as opening the Whapping cart earlier this summer — hours from about 5 pm till 2 am Wednesday through Saturday.

The most exotic item served at Whapping, at least to the uninitiated, is likely the plantain, which Badillaobando prepares in two traditional forms. On the one hand, there is the ripe plantain, known as maduro, which he fries in oil until it caramelizes, releasing a sweet flavor that is irresistible. Patacones, on the other hand, are made from the unripe plantain, pounded down into a disc and twice-fried into a savory, salty cake and served with a bean dip and the house salsa, which is tamarind-based and to die for.

Also tasty are the yucca fries, sliced from the tuber plant and prepared like French fries, yet far more juicy and fresh than your standard potato stick. All of these traditional dishes, Badillaobando says, are a rich source of vitamins and high in fiber content.

Such sides at Whapping run between $4 and $5, while meals top out at $9. According to Badillaobando, there are plans to expand the menu, though for now he's focusing on getting Eugeneans acquainted with the basics of Costa Rican eats. "We're doing a staple of the main ones," he says. "No matter where you are in Costa Rica, you'll see these anywhere."

Whapping Costa Rican Food Cart is open from about 5 pm to 2 am Wednesday through Saturday at 394 Blair St. See whapping.net/index for full menu.

• Laurelwood Golf Course opened its new restaurant, Laurelwood Bar and Grill, earlier this summer, and now it's serving up cocktails, thanks to its newly acquired liquor license. The open-to-the-public restaurant is decked out with six new big-screen televisions in preparation for the upcoming football season, and it's also home to the iconic tables and chairs that once bedecked the old Oregon Electric Station, repurposed to fit Laurelwood's antique-chic look. "It's a historical building that now has the historical furniture to go with it," manager Chris Erben says.

• We saw on Craigslist that Portland-area restaurant Killer Burger is planning to expand, including a branch in Eugene. The burger-and-fries joint serves up monster burgers, like its extravagant "Barnyard" burger with bacon, egg, ham and house-made sauce. It also offers a garden patty option for vegetarians. See its Facebook page for more updates.

• You know those moments when you're starving but can't bring yourself to leave the house in pursuit of food? Cascadian Courier Collective offers a pedal-powered solution to that first-world problem. Give them a call at 286-5182, and a delivery person on bicycle will bring you the food you need (and more — they also deliver flowers, coffee, groceries, cat food and garden supplies). According to its Facebook page, CCC serves Eugene's downtown, the UO campus, West Jefferson and Whiteaker neighborhoods from 8 am to 10 pm each day. See cascadiancouriers.com for pricing.

• For your on-campus delivery needs, try Hungry Ducks, a service that coordinates online and delivery orders and partners with over 30 restaurants in the Eugene area, including Agate Alley Bistro, Taste of India and Maru. Owner Darren Rabie says that Hungry Ducks' delivery time is a consistent 30 minutes, and delivery fees ring in at $3.99. Check it out at hungryducks.com.

Blueberries and Cream

FROM RAW LOVE FOODS

The proprietor of Raw Love Foods, Ferale Hubbard, came to enjoy raw foods out of both necessity and desire. Health issues prevented her from eating refined sugar, dairy and flour, and all her research pointed toward eating more raw and leafy vegetables and fresh fruit.

"My raw food was born out of a desire to create something that was both delicious and nutritious and made me not feel like I was missing out," Hubbard says. "I was incredibly bored with my eating for a while. I'm a foodie. I love to travel just to try new foods, so feeling deprived was not working for me. What I actually found is that I like the raw alternative better, once my palette adapts."

Hubbard's food is healthy, mostly vegan and all vegetarian, but tastes indulgent. "Cake used to be my downfall," she says, "so being able to eat desserts, especially desserts made with ingredients that nurtured my body but tasted as good as the conventional ones, was really exciting for me." Hubbard's food is 100-percent gluten-free, soy-free, made with no dairy or eggs and is allergy-aware as well.

Raw Love caters both cooked and raw, all veggie, mostly vegan cuisine. Hubbard's prepared foods can currently be found at Bohemia Café and Apothecary at 3rd and Lincoln and other select locations. She also offers a raw food challenge, in which participants choose from packages of different length and breadth, depending on their budget and desire.

Hubbard says she considers her food a "gateway drug" to eating healthier. "Because we try to make things taste as cooked or as close to the real thing as possible," she says. "We really do try to encompass the essence of cooked food. I think the best thing is to keep an open mind because it's probably not like anything else you've tried." This recipe for a raw "cream" goes great with fresh fruit, crepes, pancakes or just by itself as a healthy sweet treat.

Fresh Blueberries

CREAM:

1 cup soaked cashews (soaked 8 hours or more)
1 tsp fresh-squeezed lemon juice
5 tbsp liquid sweetener of your choice (raw agave, honey, maple syrup)
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 to 1/2 cup almond milk (see note below to make your own almond milk)
5 tbsp melted raw extra virgin coconut oil

Add all ingredients for the cream except the coconut oil to a high-speed blender and blend until completely smooth and creamy. (If you do not have a Vitamix or another high-speed blender, you can use any blender, you just may need to add more almond milk and you will get a thinner cream.) It should resemble the consistency of melted ice cream. Add coconut oil while machine is running and blend until well incorporated.

To make almond milk: Place 1 cup soaked almonds and 2 cups filtered or spring water in a high-speed blender. Blend until almonds are completely broken down. Strain through a fine-mesh nut milk bag.

Top your blueberries or other fruit, pancakes or crepes with the cream.

EL KORA

Ginger and Strawberry Shortbread Sundae

FROM RED WAGON CREAMERY
(Makes four sundaes)

Red Wagon Creamery was one of Eugene's earliest food cart success stories. The owners, Stuart and Emily Phillips, began with 2-quart Cuisinart ice cream makers, freezing 4 gallons per day, which they quickly outgrew. They gained a loyal following for their local, unique and seasonally inspired flavors such as sweet corn and honey butter ice cream and strawberry riesling sorbet.

After relocating to a full-service location downtown in May 2013, they began offering pastries, craft soda and other local handmade delicacies. Their chef intern, Sarah Bailey, is charged with developing sundae and milkshake specials, and came up with this sundae to utilize the season's freshest and sweetest strawberries. They could freeze berries to use all year round, but they don't.

"To me, the flavor is not as good," Emily Phillips says. "The quality is not as good when you're not eating them at their peak. And by utilizing other produce you're giving farmers a market." Plus, not having strawberry on the menu all year allows more room for other winter flavors, such as roasted beet ice cream.

Throughout the summer, Red Wagon Creamery's Facebook page offered a chance to submit flavor ideas. The Phillipses chose 10 finalists, and more than 600 votes were recorded to decide the winning flavor, Campfire, made with roasted banana ice cream and toasted marshmallow swirl, almonds and chocolate flake. "Campfire won by a wide margin," Emily Phillips says. "Around 300 votes came in for this flavor." Get this new flavor, or the following strawberry sundae, while they last.

8 scoops of Red Wagon's Not-So-Plain-Jane Vanilla
1 cup fresh strawberries, chopped
1 cup shortbread crumbles
1/2 cup strawberry balsamic syrup whipped cream
fresh strawberries for toppings
candied ginger

STRAWBERRY BALSAMIC SYRUP:

2 dry pints of strawberries, hulled and chopped
3 tbsp balsamic vinegar
1 cup sugar
2-3 cups water

Toss the strawberries with the vinegar and 1/4 cup sugar. Set aside. Mix remaining sugar with 2 cups of water in a pan, reserving the last cup. Heat water and sugar over medium high heat, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Bring to a boil. Once the syrup is boiling add the strawberry and vinegar mixture. Cook together over medium heat, stirring occasionally, until slightly thickened. Let syrup cool.

Once cooled, you may puree and strain the syrup for a smoother texture. If syrup is too thick use reserved water to thin to desired consistency.

ASSEMBLY:

Put one scoop of ice cream in each dish. Top the ice cream with half of the chopped strawberries, strawberry balsamic syrup and shortbread crumbles divided evenly between all four bowls. Add another scoop of ice cream to each bowl and repeat toppings. Top each sundae with whipped cream and garnish with fresh strawberries and candied ginger.

Focaccia Bread

FROM 100 MILE BAKERY

Leda Hermecz (pronounced Hermets) put a lot of thought into the name of her eatery. By calling it “100 Mile Bakery,” her intention was clear right from the start: She uses local ingredients. And not just local — as the name suggests, everything she uses in her food comes from within 100 miles of her kitchen at Marketplace@Sprout! in Springfield. The fresh and local ingredients don’t need much manipulating to taste good. “They speak for themselves,” she says. “I chose this recipe because it’s easy enough that anybody can do it, and it tastes great. And it does have a lot of garlic in it, which never hurts!”

Hermecz was 12 when her mother went back to school, and the young Leda began cooking and baking for her family. At 17, she began working at a French bakery near her home in southern Alabama. She moved to Oregon 13 years ago at the age of 22. Here she found the confluence of good food, good weather and excellent opportunities for a hardworking person who believed in what she was doing: “Keeping food in this area from start to finish,” she says.

Over time, Hermecz developed her recipes using local ingredients. Hermecz is using locally grown wheat, spelt, flax, rye, buckwheat, teff, garbanzos, lentils and pinto beans. By working closely with local producers, she has discovered that she not only has to know how to adapt recipes to local wheat, for instance, but each wheat producer has their own type of wheat that works best in certain recipes. “I have different recipes for different millers,” she says. “Every grain miller has a different ‘normal’ for their product. Greenwillow Grains wheat is savory, thick and crunchy. Camas Country Mill wheat is softer, lighter.” Which makes it a great choice for this easy focaccia bread that is flavorful as is or can be a canvas for any toppings you like.

“Letting this dough rest for 24 hours is perfect,” Hermecz says. “After that it does dry out a little bit.” After a lot of testing, Hermecz is confident in all of her recipes, especially the gluten-free baking tricks she has up her sleeve. Pausing a moment, though, she says, “I’m still working on the 100-mile croissant!”

3 cups Camas Country Mill hard white wheat bread flour
2 cups water
1 tsp salt
1 tsp yeast
1 tbsp minced garlic
1 tbsp each chopped fresh rosemary, oregano and thyme

Get your oven hot; 425 degrees should do it. Combine all ingredients in a bowl and mix until the gluten strands start to develop. This will be apparent when a spoon pulled out of the bowl makes strings like hot mozzarella cheese on pizza.

Once the dough is mixed thoroughly, it will still be very wet for bread dough. This is OK! Let it sit in a covered bowl for as long as you can stand to wait. The longer it sits, the better the flavor (This is an excellent time to make some dipping sauce — recipe follows). You could also make this dough a day or two ahead and keep it in the fridge. Then pull it out, let it come to room temperature and proceed to the next step.

Pour dough out on a parchment-lined pan. If you don’t have parchment paper, you can very generously oil a pan, but be warned that because of the water content in this dough it has a tendency to stick like crazy. Gently spread the dough out on the pan to your desired thickness. Let the dough rise again on the pan for about 40 minutes. This dough will rise to almost twice its unbaked thickness.

Once dough has risen a bit, bake your focaccia. If you want to be an artist, throw some olive oil, sea salt, fresh rosemary and grated hard cheese on top. Bake for 10 minutes if you want soft bread and 20 if you want crunchy bread. If you want to use this bread as a pizza base, par bake for 10 minutes, then top it with goodies and return to the oven for another 10 minutes. This bread is best straight out of the oven.

RAW TOMATO SAUCE:

7 small, extremely ripe whole tomatoes
2 cloves garlic, minced
8 leaves basil
leaves from 1 small stem of oregano
pinch of sea salt

Throw everything in a blender. Make sure top is secure. Blend! Salt to taste. Note: This recipe is only good with fresh, in-season extremely ripe tomatoes.

Pork Belly Sliders with Pickled Red Onions and Prosciutto Chip

FROM PORCELLINO BISTRO

Porcellino Bistro, one of the Eugene's newest campus-area eateries, looks and sounds fancy, but you can fill yourself up with food that tastes like fine dining for $10 or less. "Most Italian food in Eugene is fine dining that is expensive," says co-owner Evan Woodward. "Here we call it very casual, Italian-inspired, with good portions."

For the owners, Woodward, 26, and Cody Verkler, 27, Porcellino Bistro is their first foray into the restaurant world, though Verkler grew up around his family-owned La Petite Gourmet Bakery, and Woodward's first job as a teenager was in a restaurant. Woodward now teaches culinary classes through the Network Charter School.

Porcellino Bistro's location was previously a string of laundromats and a tanning salon, so the kitchen space is limited. They have no hood fan, and for a start-up restaurant it's incredibly expensive to have one installed, so that means they have no fryer. Still, they make all of their pasta in-house — "just flour, eggs and
